Participants learned control of our emotions and actions impact those around us for better or worse condition. Self-regulation- aspects emotional reactions are in proportion to the given circumstances. FDP taught them how to pause, as needed, and control the impulses. It also means how to handle tension, anger, manage conflict, cope with difficult scenarios, and adapt to changes in our environment. It's all about bringing out the part of us that helps manage emotions. Motivation-If intrinsically motivated, then there is a thirst for personal development. Participants are highly driven to succeed. Participants are inspired to accomplish goals because it helps them grow as a person, rather than doing it for outside rewards like money, fame, status, or recognition.
